Become

what you want your horse to be.

Carlos Tabernaberry

Become calm.

Become consistent.

Become confident.

Become a good,
kind leader.

When you do, your horse will give you trust, obedience and respect.

There are no secrets or magic whisperings you need to master. You simply need to gain an understanding of horses and face – and overcome – your fears.

What you don't need is a 'method', a bunch of tools, bits, whips, or a lot of complicated steps that must be followed in a particular order.

I believe the only steps you need to follow are those that will bring you closer to knowing how your horse thinks, feels and learns – and how you think and act, as well as your body language, and the questions you ask.

Once you master self-awareness, you are well on your way to a great relationship with your horse.

Through the eyes of the horse.
